WAR IN CONGO.

Villages Attacked by the State for Refusing to Furnish Men.

ROCKY, Nov. 23.—A letter from the Rev. Dr. Small says that the Congo State is making war upon the natives of the Upper Congo. Several months ago the government expedition for the suppression of slavery started up the river under command of Mr. Vankerkhoven. He was instructed to punish all men engaged in the slave trade, and to enlist men from each town in the Congo State service.

Two large steamers filled with troops went up the river, intending to put a stop to slave raids on the Lomani and Aruwimi rivers. Many of the large towns, including Chambiri, Bokoko, Irini and others, refused to supply the men required of them. They said they could not understand why foreigners should not only claim the ownership of the country, but should also demand the services of the ablest and strongest men.

They consequently ignored the commands of the State, sent their women and children away, brought out their powder, guns, spears and knives, and fought desperately against each company of soldiers sent to attack them. Of course they were defeated in every instance. One of the large steamers, however, was pierced in more than a dozen places, and some wounds were inflicted upon the State soldiers; but the military training of the Soukandee and Zambiri and their superior weapons left no hope for the natives.

At Bokoko fully 100 natives were killed and 60 strong fellows were taken as a war indemnity. The people of Irini fled into the jungle after a dozen of their warriors had been killed, and their large and flourishing town, covering an area of about three square miles, was burned, and nothing was left of it but blackened grass, burnt sticks and fallen trees. The Congo State soldiers took away fowls, goats, sheep, bananas and all other provisions they could find, and there is now a scarcity of food among the people. The wildest excitement prevails all over the country, and the natives are nursing a spirit of savage revenge against the European residents.

A Barbed Wire Trust.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—A suit instituted against the Elmer Manufacturing Company of Newburgh, N. Y., by the Columbia Patent Company of this city, for infringement of patents, has brought out the first authentic announcement of a "barbed wire trust," composed of the leading barbed wire manufacturers of the country, including the Washburn-Crosby Company of Worcester, Mass., and the Winters of Pennsylvania. The Columbia Company claim to own practically all patents covering the manufacture of barbed wire and machinery used in manufacturing it, and have instituted suits against small concerns in all parts of the country for infringement thereof.
